The police did not act on Connell's story and waited until Allison turned up at the station house this afternoon. He said the first he knew of the affair was when he read about it in the newspapers to-day while he was trying to figure out what had happened since Friday. He was sent to the Church street station house to complain about the disappearance of his $50 in cash, which was not returned with his papers and bank books.

Conflicting Stories.

At the Carnegie Trust Company's offices there seemed to be a strange ignorance as to who W. G. Allison is although he was the concern's first president, A special policeman directed a reporter to his office and an office boy said he ought to be in any minute, after which an agitated young clerk rushed in to say that W. G. Allison was a solictor who had been discharged a week before. After which Vice-President Shaw who had not heard the other version said:

"Allison? Oh, I remember such a name! A young man we had here some the age. But who was discharged two mostlis age. I hered him since in a private capacity, but he has left since. "Did you ever receive messages before your wife's death?"

"Many. Both she and I got messages from over the line-from the other side. Sometimes they were oral and now and then they were written."

Mr. Vanderoitt explained that most of the written communications had come to him through Dr. Temple when in "the control" of the spirit Thunder-cloud. He was not at all surprised that the letters were written in English.
